MINES IN THE MAKING.

FROM the very nature of things, it is evident that there is but one crop in any mine, and no matter how big that crop may be, when it is once harvested, there is nothing to be done save to shut down and move the machinery off and go out of business, unless ample preparation is made to "perpetuate" the business by acquiring new ground, new aeration that can supply another crop to keep the machinery working.

Thus the business of mining may be divided into two general classes for consideration: First, THE GOING MINES, and second, THE COMING MINES. The going mines are those that are harvesting their crop, while the coming mines are those that are developing their ground to take the place of the going mines as ore producers when the going mines are gone. It behooves the merchants and business men of the mining districts to aid and assist the coming mines, that their business may be perpetuated beyond the life of the going mines. It behooves the power company to make as low rates as it consistently can to the coming mines and the prospectors, that the coming mines may be in the market to use power when the going mines have cut off their power and suspended their work whether it be twenty years or fifty years from now.

Mining companies, on business principles, are now handling their business in such manner as to perpetuate their business and continue their work of mining, by securing larger acreage and new properties to take the place of their original properties when they have been mined out.

Investors in mining stocks should look carefully into the plans and policies of the mining companies before parting with their money. Companies that are acquiring new properties and extensive acreage with several working properties are perpetuating their business and making mining a permanent industry for all time to come. Companies that are COMING MINES, or own COMING MINES, in addition to their going mines, are the ones that provide safety and future life to the industry. A going mine, paying big dividends, becomes less valuable after each dividend, because its assets are reduced by the amount of the dividend, unless that company had provided additional property, either adjoining or elsewhere, to perpetuate the business when once the crop of the first mine is harvested.

Investors who desire to make money upon their investments cannot do it by buying stock in big paying mines, because with every dividend the crop is that much nearer harvested and the stock declines in value a little. When the last dividend is paid and the crop is all harvested and gone, the stock becomes worthless and the dividends that have been paid are the result. The question is, "How long will it take the dividends to return the investment with interest?" The investor who wants to make money can do it by buying stock in good COMING MINES, because the prices of stock in the coming mines are lower or cheaper, until they establish themselves as producers and the stock takes higher values, based on its ore bodies and its dividend possibilities. Then it becomes a GOING MINE, and unless the company has taken steps to perpetuate the business by having several properties, to give permanency and long life to the business.

Tonopah is particularly blessed with a dozen big going mines—mines that have ore bodies that will require many years before they will have harvested the crops, but nearly every one is branching out for new properties and increased area. The Tonopah Mining company has several properties, including a big dredging proposition in South America. The Montana Tonopah has acquired extensive holdings in Arizona and elsewhere. The Tonopah Extension has affiliated interests north and west of its original property, while the West End company acquired the control of the Halifax. Other companies are doing the same. Also, new companies are developing independent of the going mines, and it may be said that a great treasure vault of ore underlying Tonopah district is being opened up by COMING MINES, directed by both new corporations and by the interests of the older going mines.

Let Us Be Your Druggist During the Coming Year 1914

During 1913 we endeavored to provide the people of this locality with modern drug store service. Such a service embodies many requisites—an ample stock, right quality, care in storage and handling of drugs, and a constant effort to save customers (whenever possible) something on the cost of drugs.

We have been favored with a large and constantly increasing business and shall endeavor to hold and further enlarge this business during 1914 by making it worth while for careful drug buyers to trade with us. We shall keep pace with every advance in the science of pharmacy and by every means possible try to promote the welfare of our customers.
